ACORN BRAND STONEWARE

FOREWORD

Pottery making involves many technicalities requiring only the experienced to obtain superior results. The name UHL has been associated with pottery for five generations, lending years of experience to our present organization and enabling us to offer to the discriminating buyer stoneware of enviable reputation and quality. Our own clay beds furnish us with a superior clay free from impurities, which is thoroughly treated in the initial stage. Our ware shows the result of the employment of efficient workmen and machines which experience and scientific improvement endorse. Careful inspection and assortment of the ware is a feature appreciated by our patrons. We have enlarged the capacity of our factory and intend to perpetuate the spirit of progress in the future, but at no time do we sacrifice quality for quantity.

Conditions of Sale

PACKING

Our goods are packed by only experienced packers. An ample quantity of straw is always used.

Should there be any breakage in shipment, consignee must look to railroad company for relief.

Our responsibility ceases upon receipt of signed bill of lading from transportation company.

ORDERS

No order is too large for us to execute or too small to receive our careful attention.

NOTICE

We specialize on making special items to order, such as Thermos Jug Liners, Drinking Fountain Liners, Corroding Pots, Novelities or any other special pieces that can consistently be made of stoneware.

SHORTAGE

All claims for shortage, errors, etc., must be made within five days from receipt of goods.

CREDIT

To avoid delay, purchasers with whom we have no account and who have no mercantile rating, should accompany their order with check, money order or satisfactory reference.

ALL AGREEMENTS

All agreements are contingent upon strikes, accidents or other causes beyond our control.

RETURNED GOODS

Under no circumstances will we accept the return of goods with freight charges prepaid or otherwise.

If for any reason an error has been made by our shipping department in shipping goods not ordered or for any other reason, such fact must be made known within five days in writing, when such matter will be handled and adjusted to the entire satisfaction of the customer.

ESTABLISHED 1849

A Short History of the Uhl Pottery Company

The name of UHL has been connected with the stoneware industry for the past century or more.

Louis and August Uhl, who had been operating a pottery in Lisberg, Germany, came to the United States in 1849. They came down the Ohio River and after stopping at Cincinnati for a while, continued on to Evansville, where they located permanently and erected the first Uhl Pottery Company plant in the United States. This plant was located at 9th and Main streets in Evansville, and clay was secured in the vicinity of Evansville. The clay near Evansville was soon found to be unsatisfactory, and they started prospecting for clay in the surrounding territory, finding a suitable clay at Huntingburg. This clay mined at Huntingburg was hauled to Grandview in wagons and there loaded on scows and shipped to Evansville, where it was transferred to drays and hauled to the plant.

With the advent of the Southern Railway running from Huntingburg to Evansville, the plant at 9th and Main streets was abandoned, and a new plant was built on Illinois and John streets adjoining the Southern Railway tracks. In 1908 the site of the Evansville plant was sold, and the plant was moved to Huntingburg, where it would be near the clay deposits.

The main office and a warehouse were kept in Evansville until 1934. At that time the main office was moved to Huntingburg, leaving a salesroom and warehouse still located in Evansville.

The production of the company has been continually increased until, at the present time, the production is one carload daily.

PROCESS OF MANUFACTURE

MINING AND TIPPLE

The clay used in the manufacture of stoneware is usually called fire-clay and in this locality lies in a vein approximately 5 feet thick under an over-burden of from 30 to 60 feet. Practically all of the usable fire clay in this section is topped with a 12 to 14-inch vein of coal and above the coal a vein of slate running from 5 to 20 feet in thickness. The clay is mined in practically the same manner as coal. An entry is usually driven into the side of a clay-bearing hill at the level of the clay vein. Rooms are struck off from the entry, the clay being shot down with dynamite, then loaded on tram cars and hauled out of the mine to the tipple. From the tipple it is transferred to a truck, which delivers it to the clay bins of the pottery, where it is permitted to weather prior to the next process, known as washing.

MOULD ROOM

One of the largest investments of a stoneware plant is the mould equipment. Each size and shape must have moulds, which are made in the pottery's own mould-making department. The first step in making the mould is the modeling or lathing of the model, after which a mould is taken from this model. This mould is then used to make a block and case for the reproduction of other moulds. The number of moulds carried on each item depends on the quantity of that item which must be made every day as the moulds can be filled only once a day in most cases.

WASHING

After the clay has been weathered, it is elevated into the blunger mills, where it is mixed with steam and water until it is of a consistency of cream. It is then fed by gravity from the blunger mills through a 60-mesh revolving screen. This screen eliminates all the foreign matter coarser than  $\frac{1}{16}$  of an inch, the screened clay (in liquid state) going through the screen into a cistern, and then it is pumped into the filter press. This filter press consists of 85 chambers, each one lined with a canvas liner. The water in the liquid clay is forced through the canvas liner, leaving a deposit of clay on the inside of the chamber. The clay is then taken from the filter press and put into a bin ready for pugging.

PUGGING CLAY

After the clay is washed, it is taken from the bin and mixed with a proper amount of water for either jiggering or turning. The clay for jiggering is very soft, nearly semi-liquid, whereas the clay for turning is considerably stiffer.

JIGGERING OR TURNING

Jiggering.—The clay is put into a revolving plaster of Paris mould. The mould shapes the outside of the piece. A shoe or tool fits into this mould, mixing the mould the desired thickness of the piece. The mould is then put into the drier and allowed to dry twenty-four hours. The plaster of Paris mould absorbs the water, and the piece shrinks away from the mould. It requires an expert mechanic to operate a jigger wheel efficiently.

Turning.—The clay required for turning is somewhat stiffer than that used for jiggering. A ball of clay is placed upon a revolving table, and the mechanic shapes this clay into the desired shape. This operation requires a very skilled mechanic. Only after years of patient practice can a man turn ware efficiently.

FACTURE OF POTTERY

FINISHING

The piece is taken from the mould and is finished and sponged. All rough edges are taken off. If the piece is to have a handle, it is struck on at this time. After the piece has been finished, it is put in the drier, where it is dried for another twenty-four hours.

GLAZING

The piece is either dipped into, poured, or sprayed with the glaze of the desired color. The glaze is mixed from various minerals, such as zinc oxide, feldspar, flint, ball clays, oxide cobalt, and oxide copper. Each mineral has a special duty to perform in helping a glaze. The compounding of glazes is a very deep study, and the formulas for the different glazes are guarded carefully by the various manufacturers. After the piece is glazed, the glaze is removed from any part of the piece that is going to touch another piece in the burning process.

SETTING

After the ware has been glazed and is thoroughly dry, it is then transferred to the kilns, where it is placed ready to be burned. A kiln will hold approximately two carloads of stoneware. Each piece, such as pitchers, vases, etc., must be placed either in siggers or jars, when set for the kiln. After the entire kiln is filled with ware, it is then sealed up and is ready for burning.

BURNING

After the kiln is sealed, the fires are lit in ten fire boxes distributed evenly around the kiln. The heat is gradually raised until it reaches 2,400° Fahrenheit. This heat raising is very gradual and usually requires sixty-five hours. After the desired heat is reached, the fires are allowed to burn down, after which all fire boxes are sealed and the damper on the stack is closed. The only opening in the kiln to permit heat to escape is at the very top of the crown. Cooling of a stoneware kiln requires approximately three to four days' time. After the kiln is cooled, the ware is then removed and taken to the warehouse.

PACKING

When the ware is shipped, it is packed by experienced packers, either in crates or barrels for L. C. L. shipments, or in pool trucks for truck delivery, or in cars for carload delivery.

DELIVERY

The Uhl Pottery Company maintains its own fleet of delivery trucks and in all of the territories surrounding the plant, delivery is made direct to the merchant's store at a considerable saving in packaging and transportation cost with a minimum of breakage and a maximum of service.
